Ackermanns, London, 1843

A work of surpassing interest to the student of American Natural History, Anthropology, and Ethnography. The exquisitely finished and elaborately colored engravings have rarely been exceeded in truthfulness and beauty. It is no exaggeration to say that they possess all the beauty and effect of original drawings. The numerous portraits of North American Indians surpass anything of the kind ever attempted; and that part of his work illustrative of their manners, customs, traditions and superstitions, was justly considered by the author as by far the most attractive and valuable portion.
